“Think Spalding Gray and David Sedaris with a whole lot of audio and visual aids.”

– The Aspen Times

“Smith’s multimedia, autobiographical comedy is obsessive, compulsive and very funny.”

– Montreal Gazette

Paonia, Colo. (July 2, 2012) — Writer/performer Barry Smith isn’t exactly what you’d call “ambitious” when it comes to careers. He’s managed to resist actual “adult” employment since earning his first buck at age 6 and has gotten by on a lifetime of odd jobs – some decidedly more odd than others. In this solo multimedia comedy told through true words, pictures, sound and video, EVERY JOB I’VE EVER HAD examines the employment consequences of a life spent following one’s bliss.

No stranger to fringe festivals, humorist Barry Smith is the writer and performer of previous award-winning, sell-out fringe hits Jesus in Montana (winner of the 2005 New York International Fringe Festival’s Outstanding Solo Show Award) and American Squatter (winner of Critic’s Choice Award at the 2007 Vancouver International Fringe Festival), among others.

Hailed as an “energetic and versatile raconteur” by New York Magazine, Smith transports audiences to a place both entertaining and strangely relatable by all through his signature “modern monologue” style. Smith is just one man, a stage and a screen – ready to entertain with an (always) irreverent look at life and laughter.

EVERY JOB I’VE EVER HAD is actually not recommended for children or the obsessively-compulsed.

Barry Smith is an award-winning humorist whose solo multimedia shows have won the hearts of thousands at sold-out performances across the US and Canada. Smith currently writes an award-winning humor column, "Irrelativity" and has written and directed numerous short films. See more of Smith's work at www.barrysmith.com.
